4. With reference to child abuse, including sexual abuse, please provide disaggregated data for the period 1999-2001 (by age, gender and types of violations reported), on the:

With the amendment of the Child Welfare Act in 2000, which came into effect in 2001, the concept of child abuse was integrated into the legal framework to protect children's rights. According to the newly amended Act, the primary institutions to which cases of child abuse may be reported are the police and the Centre for the Prevention of Child Abuse. The Centre for the Prevention of Child Abuse was founded in accordance with the Act in 2001 and there are currently 18 Centres at the local and national level. Among the 2,606 cases of abuse reported to the Centre for the Prevention of Child Abuse nationwide, 2,105 cases were confirmed as constituting child abuse. On the amendment of the Child Welfare Act and the establishment of the Centre for the Prevention of Child Abuse, please refer to the relevant section of Part III.

6. Please provide statistical data (including, where relevant, by gender, age, type of crimes) covering the period between 1999 to 2001 on the:

a) Number of minors suspected of criminal offence;

Year	1999	2000	2001
Number	150,821	151,176	138,030

b) Number of minors subject to criminal procedure who were sentenced by court to sanction, and the nature of sanctions (community service; detention; other types of sanctions);

Nature of sanctions:

Children and minor criminals may be dealt with by either criminal courts or juvenile departments of a family or district court. Firstly, at the criminal court, children and minors can be sentenced to imprisonment, a suspended sentence, fine and suspension or imposition of sentence. They can also be sentenced to probation and parole.

There are two Juvenile Prisons for imprisonment of children and minors.

Under the scheme of "Probation and Parole", minors aged 12 to 20 may be sentenced to sanctions as follows:

- Probation and Parole in its narrow sense: a system in which convicted offenders are to be placed under the direction and supervision of a probation and parole officer, while leading a free life in lieu of incarceration.
- Community Service Order: a scheme by which convicted offenders can serve the society by providing unpaid useful labour services for a certain period of time while leading a free life in lieu of incarceration. To implement the Community Service Order, the Community Service Centre has been established. The scope of the Community Service Order covers service for social welfare facilities and participation in natural disaster recovery.

- Attendance Centre Order: a scheme by which convicted offenders who need professional assistance are to receive rehabilitation, including psychiatric treatment in the Probation and Parole Office or other non-profit organisations designated by the Probation and Parole Office for a certain period of time, while leading a free life in lieu of incarceration. Under the scheme of an Attendance Centre Order, offenders are placed in various education programmes such as drug abuse prevention programmes and sexual offence prevention programmes.

For more detailed information on the scheme of “Probation and Parole”, please refer to the website of the Korean Probation and Parole Office, www.probation.go.kr.

The Juvenile Department of a family court or a district court deals with children and minors who commit minor crimes as Juvenile Protection Cases. For the system of Juvenile Protection Case and the Protective Disposition imposed by the system on those children and minors, please refer to the item 6.e.

d) Number of suspended sentences: Please refer to <Table 6.b.1>

e) Number of minors subject to protection procedures, and the nature of protective measures imposed;

The system of Juvenile Protection Case and Protective Dispositions imposed by the system are stipulated in the Juvenile Act. According to the Act, the purpose of the system is to ensure sound nurturing of juveniles and the primary tool used is Protective Dispositions. Protective Disposition is a special criminal disposition, but, unlike general criminal dispositions, does not carry criminal records and therefore enable juvenile offenders to start over with a clean slate.

Nature of protective measures (Protective Dispositions) imposed by the Juvenile Act

- No.1: Consignment to the care and custody of the guardian or any person who can provide protection for the juvenile in substitution for the guardian
- No.2: Short term probation
- No.3: Probation
- No.4: Consignment to a child welfare institution under the Child Welfare Act or another juvenile protection institution
- No.5: Referral to a hospital or a sanatorium
- No.6: Consignment to a Juvenile Training School for a short-term
- No.7: Consignment to a Juvenile Training School

Juvenile Training Schools are operated as training and education institutes for the juvenile offenders. For the number of juveniles consigned to Juvenile Training Schools, please refer to < Table 6.c.2 >.

For more detailed information on the procedure of disposition of the Juvenile Protection Cases and Juvenile Training School, please refer to the website, www.jschool.go.kr.

B. General Measures of Implementation

- 1. Please provide information on the reasons some of the recommendations contained in the Committee's previous observations (CRC/C/15/Add.51, 1996) have not yet been implemented, in particular those related to adoption (para. 15), and the aims of education (para. 16). Please explain how the State party envisages overcoming this situation.

In the Republic of Korea, more than 90% of the adopted children are aged under 5 months and are born out of wedlock. In most cases, adoptive parents have a strong tendency not to disclose adoption but to want the child registered as their biological child. This tendency can be attributed to the traditional culture which places great importance to the purity of bloodline, a notion which is changing gradually. In these circumstances, if adoption requires authorisation from competent authorities, as provided by the Convention, it may discourage potential adoptive parents from going through adoption, resulting in a decrease of domestic adoption. Therefore, though essentially in agreement with the principles of the Convention with regard to the issue of adoption, the Republic of Korea needs more time to fully implement the relevant provisions due to the abovementioned cultural characteristics related to adoption.

To address the extreme competitiveness of education, as commented on by the Committee through the Committee's previous observations, the Ministry of Education and Human Resources Development has reformed the system of matriculation. The reform is geared toward catering to the needs and aptitude of individual students. Accordingly, departing from the past student selection process which reflected the students' academic records only, a set of additional criteria for granting admission to university was developed, which includes other merits such as outstanding records of volunteer service and winnings in contests in a variety of fields. The "Special Selection" process opens door for students with special talents or experiences to enter colleges even if their scholastic achievement is less desirable.

In addition, educational curriculum for primary and secondary students was reformed with a view to strengthening 'student-centred education'. For example, under the 7th Educational Curriculum, which has been implemented since 2000, students have more choices in selecting their own curriculum. A differentiated curriculum was also introduced to reflect the different levels of academic achievement among students including a Level Differentiated Curriculum, an In-Depth/Supplementary Differentiated Curriculum and an Elective Differentiated Curriculum.

- 2. Please indicate whether the State party is considering withdrawing its reservations to art. 9(3), 21(a), and 40(2)(b)(v).

The Government of the Republic of Korea is carefully and periodically reviewing its reservations to the Convention with a view to withdrawing them, but, deems it premature to withdraw the reservations due to the existing conflicts with domestic laws. Regarding the reservation to Article 9(3), the relevant laws with regard to divorce and custody of children are still in progress and it would take some time to legally guarantee the right of children to maintain contact with their other parent. The right of a divorced parent who does not have custody to maintain contact with children was recognised by the Civil Act only in 1990, reflecting the enhancement of the status of women.

With regard to Article 21(a) on the authorisation for adoption, it is difficult to introduce this requirement in the near future due to the reasons mentioned previously. In order to withdraw the reservations, the Government will continue to work closely with civil society to promote public opinions favourable to their withdrawal while making every effort to change its laws and systems.

- 3. Please provide details regarding the mandate, functions and budget of the National Commission on Human Rights and whether it has a specific responsibility with regard to child rights.

With regard to the mandate and functions of the National Human Rights Commission (hereafter Commission), please refer to the Chapters III and IV of the National Human Rights Commission Act, which is attached herewith as Annex I.

The mandate of the Commission covers human rights issues in general and therefore, though the Commission does not have a specific responsibility with regard to child rights, promotion of child rights is within the mandate of the Commission. Since its establishment in 2001, the Commission has made various efforts to protect and promote child rights. Some examples of such efforts are as follows:

- The Commission has reviewed the 'Comprehensive Plan for Child Protection and Rearing', which has been coordinated by the Office for Government Policy Coordination under the direction of the Prime Minister.
- The Commission has investigated the human rights protection programme for children and juveniles within the procedure of juvenile justice.
- The Commission has published a book for children, with the theme of protecting human rights of abandoned children and preventing child abuse.
- The Commission has published a 'Basic Guide Book for Human Rights Education' for teachers. The targeted readers of the book are parents, school administrators and social workers, in addition to teachers. It provides guidelines on teaching methods and tools for human rights education, including children's rights.
- The Commission is reviewing a petition on discrimination against a disabled child, with regard to the rejection of admission to a kindergarten on the ground of the disability of the child concerned.

With regard to the budget of the National Human Rights Commission for the year of 2002, please refer to Annex II.

4. Please provide additional information on the system for data collection and whether it covers in a disaggregated way all children under 18 and all areas under the Convention.

The current system for data collection in Korea is insufficient to cover all children under 18 and all areas under the Convention, mainly because most domestic laws related to children's rights do not adopt the definition of the child provided by the Convention, namely, those under 18 years of age, with a few exceptions such as the Child Welfare Act. Laws and governmental bodies dealing with children's rights have mandates to various age groups. For example, youth or juveniles defined by the Framework Act on Juveniles under the responsibility of the Ministry of Culture and Tourism are those aged from 9 to 24. The Act on the Protection of Youth from Sexual Exploitation protects youth under 19. But most laws divide age groups into two classes, adults and minors who are under 20 years of age and do not have the right to vote. Korea National Statistical Office, the main governmental body on data collection, usually classifies age brackets by 5 years and produces statistics accordingly. As a result, data collection with regard to children's rights is inadequate to address all areas covered by the Convention in a disaggregated way.

To address the insufficiency of data collection, the Ministry of Welfare and Health has commissioned the Institute for Health and Social Affairs to develop a Children's Rights Index to be used in the evaluation of the progress in children's rights, carried out every 5 years. Therefore, we expect vast improvements in data collection on children's rights. The result of the evaluation using the Children' Rights Index will be published in the form of a White Paper every 5 years starting from 2005.

5. In light of article 4, please explain how the State party has allocated resources in the wake of the 1997 financial crisis and subsequent restructuring in order to fulfil its obligations under the Convention.

In the face of the 1997 financial crisis and subsequent restructuring, the Government of the Republic of Korea made efforts to ensure children's rights as stipulated in the Convention. For example, it operated time-limited social welfare programmes, providing assistance to cover living and medical cost and tuition for secondary education.

In 2000, the Ministry of Health and Welfare also started a programme providing free meals to children in an effort to cushion the economic hardship felt by families, especially children, as a result of the financial crisis.

While a similar programme run by the Ministry of Education and Human Resources Development provides lunch to school children of low-income households, the Ministry of Health and Welfare, in cooperation with local governments, provides dinner to school children, and breakfast and lunch to preschoolers who are unable to have regular meals either due to poverty or due to a lack of a care taker.

The number of children who benefited from the programme run by the Ministry of Health and Welfare was around 22,000 for 2000 and 2001 respectively. In 2002, the number declined to around 15,000. The amount of budget allocated for the scheme has been adjusted as the number of children requiring the support has decreased from 7,084 million won in 2000 to 8,602 million won in 2001 and to 5,959 million won in 2002.

6. Please provide additional information on how governmental institutions cooperate with non-governmental organisations, especially with reference to the participation of representatives of civil society in the design and implementation of policies and programmes for children.

By Presidential Decree on the Regulations on Consultative Committees, governmental bodies may set up a consultative committee on policy-making, comprising of experts in the relevant fields. The expert opinions of the consultative committee are sought and taken into account at all stages from the policy-making to implementation. For example, the Consultative Committee of the Ministry of Education and Human Resources Development participates in the drafting and implementation of main education policies. Of the total number of 90 members, 68 are non-government representatives, including 12 NGO representatives from such organisations as the Korean Teachers and Educational Workers' Union, the National Parents Group for a Truthful Education, and the Korea Federation of Teacher's Associations.

The Youth Fostering Committee, chaired by the Prime Minister, is composed of 30 members, ministers of relevant ministries and civilians with profound knowledge and wide experience with respect to the nurturing of youth in the fields of education, labour, social welfare, and culture. The Committee deliberates a basic plan for youths and a yearly executive program, the establishment of medium-term and long-term youth fostering policies and matters concerning the evaluation of major policies and the improvement of institutions for protecting the youth. The Ministry of Culture and Tourism allows young people to voice their views through a Youth Committee, which allows them to participate in the decision-making process.

7. Please provide additional information on the householder system of registration, including how foreign children and children out of wedlock are registered at birth.

The householder system of registration, or family register system, which includes a birth report, is regulated by the Civil Act and the Family Register Act. (The relevant articles of the two Acts are enclosed as Annex III and IV.) The core of the system is that every family should be headed by a householder. In other words, families are registered under the headship of the householder, usually the father. The householder or the head of the family is a person who has succeeded the family lineage or has set up a branch family, or who has established a new family or has restored a family for any other reason (Article 778 of the Civil Act).

According to the Civil Act, the father of a child born out of wedlock may enter the child in his family register (Article 782(1)). If for any reason it is impossible for a child born out of wedlock to have its name entered in its father's family register, the child may be entered into its mother's family register. A child shall establish a new family, should both options be unfeasible (Article 782(2)). The Family Register Act prescribes that the birth report of a child should state whether the child was born out of wedlock (Article 49(2)). The person responsible for the birth report of a child born out of wedlock is the mother of the child. (Article 51 of the Family Register Act)

In case of a foreign child, namely a child born between a Korean and a non-Korean, the Family Register Act provides that his/her birth report should be submitted to the relevant authority with the name and nationality of the non-Korean parent (Article 49(2) of the Family Register Act). A child shall succeed his or her father's surname, but when the father of a child is a foreigner, the child may succeed the mother's surname (Article 781 of the Civil Act).

The householder system or the family headship system has been criticised mainly because of the emphasis on the priority of paternal lineage and the ensuing violation of the principle of gender equality. For example, under the system, the children of a divorced mother will be forced to keep the surname of the father, even when the mother, who has the custody, remarries and wishes to enter the children in her current spouse's family register. For the registration of children into this new family, the consent both from the stepfather and from the head of the family to which they belong is required (Article 784 of the Civil Act). In this regard, the opponents of the system argue that it violates the spirit of gender equality and human dignity guaranteed by the Constitution.

There have been debates on the householder system or the family headship system for some time. On one hand, the supporters argue that the system is based on the tradition and has been the nucleus of the society as a whole. On the other hand, the opponents argue the history of the system, introduced during the Japanese colonial rule, is fairly short and it violates the spirit of gender equality and human dignity guaranteed by the Constitution. Within the Government, the Ministry of Gender Equality has been advocating the latter's position. The draft revision of the Civil Act, submitted by the Government in 2000, includes new provisions which allow the children of a divorced mother to take the surname of their stepfather. Currently, the draft revision is pending in the National Assembly.

In addition, in 2001, two district courts formally asked for the decision of the Constitutional Court on the constitutionality of the provisions of the Civil Act pertaining to the householder system. If the Constitutional Court decides the articles concerned are not in accord with the Constitution, they will be revised or nullified.

8. Please provide additional information on the practice of corporal punishment within the family, in schools and in other institutions. Please explain when the Ministry of Education guidelines and school regulations permit the use of corporal punishment in schools.

Corporal punishment is banned in institutions, such as Juvenile Training School and care institutions.

According to Article 18 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act on Discipline of Students and Article 31(7) of the Enforcement Decree of the Act, the head of a school may impose corporal punishment to students when it is deemed educationally inevitable.¹⁴

The Ministry of Education and Human Resources Development does not lay out any concrete guidelines on when the use of corporal punishment is permitted, leaving it up to the discretion of each school. The use of corporal punishment depends on school regulations, which are devised by participation of or reflecting opinions of teachers, parents and students. School regulations vary from school to school with regard to corporal punishment: some provide concrete rules on when and how corporal punishment is allowed; some ban the use of corporal punishment altogether; and some have no rules on that issue.

At present, there is no consensus on banning corporal punishment in schools. Recently, according to the advice of the National Human Rights Commission, the Ministry of Education and Human Resources Development collected opinions from teachers'

¹⁴ Article 18 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act on Discipline of Students

(1) The schoolmaster of a school may discipline or otherwise guide students, under the conditions as determined by Acts and subordinate statutes or school regulations, as deemed necessary for education: Provided, That he shall not expel students in the process of compulsory education from school; (2) Where the schoolmaster of a school intends to discipline any students, he shall go through due formalities such as presenting the student concerned or his parents an opportunity to state his or their opinions.

Article 31(7) of the Enforcement Decree of the Act

Where the head of a school provides guidance referred to in the purview of Article 18(1) of the Act, it shall be conducted by methods such as discipline and admonition which do not give physical pain to students, except in educationally inevitable circumstances.

associations, relevant NGOs, regional offices of education and heads of schools, but a consensus was not reached on this issue.

Part □

1. New bills or enacted legislation

a. Amendment of the Child Welfare Act

The Child Welfare Act was wholly amended in 2000. The newly amended Act stipulates the principles of non-discrimination, the right to life, survival and development, and the priority of the best interests of children. Another improvement which the amendment has brought is the introduction of the concept of child abuse into the Act. The previous version of the Child Welfare Act had only one provision for the prohibition of child abuse, but the application of the prohibition was limited to the person responsible for the child concerned. The newly amended Act, in addition to the Special Act for the Punishment of Domestic Violence and the Act on the Prevention of Domestic Violence and Protection of Victims Thereof, provides the legal framework to take measures against child abuse such as the installation of 24 hours emergency telephone lines to be used for reporting child abuse cases and the establishment of centres for the prevention of child abuse, which provide protective services to the child victims. In addition, while any person may report child abuse cases when he/she finds one, persons who are working in fields related to children, such as teachers and medical practitioners, have the duty to report child abuse cases to the relevant authorities.

b. Enactment of the Act on Protection of Youth from Sexual Exploitation

(entry into force in February 2000, partly amended in 2001)

The purpose of the Act on Protection of Youth from Sexual Exploitation is “to guarantee youth human rights and facilitate their growth as sound members of society by protecting youth from sexual exploitation including purchasing or aiding the purchase of sex with youth or making or distributing obscene materials taking advantage of youth. (Article 1)” The youth protected by the Act are those below 19 years of age. Pursuant to this Act, offenders of sex crimes that involve youth, such as paying for sex with youth, mediation of sex with youth, the selling and buying of youth and production and distribution of child pornography may be punished. For the victims of sexual abuse against youth, the Act provides protective measures and the operation of counselling facilities. In addition, the Commission on Youth Protection is authorised to disclose to the public the personal information of those who have committed crimes under the Act and have been sentenced by courts.

¹⁵ The website of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trades (www.mofat.go.kr) provides the Convention of the Right of the Child both in English and in Korean.

2. New Institutions

a. Centres for the Prevention of Child Abuse

According to the newly amended Child Welfare Act, Centres for the Prevention of Child Abuse were established in 2001 by the Ministry of Health and Welfare. At present, a National Centre and 17 local Centres for the Prevention of Child Abuse are in operation. The operation of the 24-hour telephone hotline for reporting child abuse is their responsibility. Local Centres investigate reported cases of child abuse, including by conducting visits, and providing remedial services to the victims and the perpetrators of child abuse. The National Centre is in charge of the coordination of the work of the local Centres, such as the operation of a database on the management of child abuse. The National Centre also develops programmes for the education of mandatory reporters of child abuse and publishes annual national reports on child abuse (the first report was published in 2002). Campaigns against child abuse have been organised and two celebrities are working as publicity ambassadors for the prevention of child abuse in cooperation with the Centres.

b. Ministry of Gender Equality

The Ministry of Gender Equality was established in 2000 as the focal point within the Government to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women. The prevention of domestic violence and sexual violence and protection of victims thereof are within the mandate of the Ministry. Accordingly, the operation of Centres for Counselling of Victims of Domestic Violence and Centres for Counselling of Victims of Sexual Violence are under the supervision of the Ministry. Victims of child abuse may be referred to those Centres if their cases are reported as domestic or sexual violence. The Ministry is also expected to play a role addressing the issue of discrimination not only against girls but against foreign children and children born out-of-wedlock because, in many respects, discrimination against such children is closely related to gender equality in Korea. The issue of the family register system is a prominent example of the role the Ministry expected to play.

c. National Human Rights Commission

Regarding the National Human Rights Commission, which was established in 2001, please refer to item 3 of Section B of Part I.

3. Newly Implemented Policies

Comprehensive Plan for Child Protection and Rearing

In 2001, a Comprehensive Plan for Child Protection and Rearing was formulated by the relevant authorities in charge of child-related issues under the leadership of the Prime Minister. The Plan devises 48 measures in the five areas for child protection and rearing, namely, the enhancement of children's rights, improvement of the health and welfare of children, strengthening of children's safety, protection of children from harmful environments and support for the sound rearing of children. Some of the measures included in the Plan are the development of a Children's Rights Index, the extension of the scope of specialised education for children with development disorders and autism and health examinations for preschoolers.

4. Newly Implemented Programmes and Projects and Their Scope

a. System of Disclosing Personal Information of Sex Offenders against Youth

According to Article 20 of the Act on Protection of Youth from Sexual Exploitation, the personal information of those who commit the following crimes may be disclosed: those involved in paid sex with youth, or the owner of an enterprise in the youth sex trade; those involved in producing, importing, or exporting child pornography; those involved in the sale of youth or sexual abuse of youth. The selection of offenders subject to the system depends on the penalty, type of crime, age of the victim, nature of the crime and the offender's criminal record related to youth sex. The scope of personal information to be disclosed is the name, age and date of birth, occupation, detailed address, and summary of the offence. A decision on whose personal information should be disclosed is made through a process comprising the two steps of screening and the collection of the opinions of the individuals concerned. So far, the personal information of 1,283 offenders has been disclosed on three occasions.

b. Enhancement of Protection of Maternity

To enhance the protection of maternity and the child, maternity leave was expanded from 60 days to 90 days in 2001 (Article 72 of the Labour Standards Act). Temporary Leave Benefits for Childcare, which the Government pays to workers during the period of temporary leave for childcare, was also introduced in 2001. The amount of the benefit is 200,000 won per month, but it is expected to be increased to 300,000 won (the Employment Insurance Act and its Enforcement Regulation).

c. Expansion of free and compulsory middle school education

The project of expansion of free middle school education to urban areas is being implemented. By 2004, all middle school students will be benefit from free education. The budget for the expansion of free middle school education is as follows:

(unit: billion won)

Year	2002	2003	2004
Beneficiaries	First-year students	First and Second-year students	All Middle School Students
Budget ¹⁶	267.8	545.0	946.4

¹⁶ For entrance fee, tuition and the cost of textbooks
